

Italian banks renaissance?

How and why, they are returning to make profits and pay dividends.

Italian banks have experienced a decade of difficulties due to:

- Low interest rates and profitability.
- Bad loans which were disposed of through write-downs and sales.
- Increasingly stringent restrictions on capital requirements, eroded in the meantime by losses.

However, 2021 and the next few years can represent a turning point, for at least 5 reasons:

1. Interest rates should start to rise again, in part they are already doing it, and with them the interest margin, or the margin deriving from the "historical characteristic" banking activity of money management. It is the most historic and obvious profession of banks, made up, on one hand of customer deposits at the lowest possible rate and, on the other of loans to customers, in the most profitable and least risky way. The gradual rise in lending rates and the stabilization of "no cost" funding, looks reasonably possible.

2. An increase in revenues from services, typically remunerated on a commission basis, is expected mainly from payment services, securities brokerage, securities trading, asset management and life & health insurance.

3. Analysts expect a drop in operating costs, as a result of streamlining branch networks and staff (in number, average age, and salary), plus investments in fintech has made customers increasingly independent on "home banking"¹.

4. A decline in provisions and loans value adjustments is expected, thanks to the "cleaning" work done in recent years, which has drastically reduced non-performing loans in the assets of banks and implied a greater selectivity in new disbursements.

5. On the future profits, for some listed banks, a lighter level of taxation is imaginable, thanks to the "tax recovery/compensation" of the losses recorded in previous years.

In addition to the above,

- Banks will be able to return to pay dividends², overtaking the limits currently in force until 30 September 2021 (due to the so-called moratorium).
 - The Italian and European governments are pushing for greater concentration in the sector.
 - The Central Bank continues to guarantee the banking system plenty of money at zero or negative cost
- Meanwhile, in the first 3 months of this year, loans to Italian residents grew by 6.5% year on year³, with loans to the private sector (households and non-financial companies) up by 2.9% year on year. year and + 0.5% month on month in March, favoured by the Government's initiatives to support and guarantee the debt of households and companies, channelling the liquidity injected by the European Central Bank (ECB) mainly through Targeted longer-term refinancing operations (TLTROs).

In March 2021 (latest data available) the average active interest rate charged to businesses on new loans increased by 12 basis points compared to the previous month, while those for households, mainly on mortgages, increased by 7 basis points "month on month"⁴.

The cost of funding, mainly "cash or cash like deposits", and less on bond issues, is still steadily low, at 0.33%⁵.

The liquidity of the "system" is always overabundant, with liquid balances on current account deposits which marked the historical record of Euro 1,357 billion. At the same time, Italian banks' investments in Italian national public debt bonds (BTP) clearly decreased, -5% quarter on quarter, to EUR 426 billion, easing the concentration risk and the potential for losses in a scenario of rate rebounds⁶.

If we look at the quality of the balance sheet assets at the end of the first quarter of 2021, we note that gross and net impaired loans are stable at around €52 billion and approximately 20 billion respectively⁷, with a degree of "coverage" of possible losses future, unchanged, at around 61%.

Meanwhile, expectations on the Italian government initiative to boost and expand the tax advantages in the case of bank mergers are surging, starting based on the so-called DTA (Deferred Tax Assets), partly aimed at facilitating the sale of the absolute majority stake held by the State in Banca Monte Paschi di Siena, which should take place by the end of 2021.

In an imaginary merger involving Unicredit/Banco Popolare and Banca Monte dei Paschi di Siena (MPS), the historic Sienese bank, despite being the smallest partner, would be the one that brings the maximum advantage in terms of Deferred Tax Assets (DTA), which can be calculated in a pre-tax "reduction" of approximately Euro 3 billion⁸.

There are therefore good reasons why the Italian banking sector is enjoying and can continue to enjoy, also in the rest of 2021 and next year, a growing interest from investors.
